FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL.

Gold has been less unsettled to-day than during the previous part of the week, and the "bears" are less confident in putting out "shorts." But the desire to revive panic and hammer the market of course con-tinues among those who have yet to buy their gold for fluences, and in the same manner it has fallen. In the one ounted peace. In each, however, they have been in ace of public sentiment, and worked a great deal of turbance of values for their aggrandizement in England during the Napoleonic wars, but the government the scourge of society in time of war and financial be great danger of a commercial crash, which will ing the receipts for internal revenue and customs duties, impair the public credit, revive distrust and stimulate the rise of the gold premium. If our importers, jobbers and legitimate traders are hed or made bankrupt, and they are no long r able to pay taxes or subscribe to loans, financial emand not until a new set of adventurers appeared upon the ruins of the past, or those who had been able to survive

If the present decline was likely to prove permanent, and if the speculators, who are accelerating it, were actuated by any higher motive than personal gain, there would be reason for congratulating the nation upon improvement in value of the paper dollar; if our financial and mercantile affairs deranged for the profit of a few reckless blers, who will next week be running gold up as they are now running it down, there is reason to regret the

There is at the moment no foreign outlet for our securities, as at present prices it would be profitable to import them from England. Exports of produce have been che ked for the same reasons. Foreign exchange is consequently held with much greater firmness, and higher rates rule. Bankers ask 108% a 109% for their sixty day bills, and 109% a 110 at three

The debts of the several States have been so largely increased since the war commenced that local taxation is pressing heavily upon a large and influential section of the community, who are looking about them for some prospect of relief. They argue that as nearly the whole of the increase during the last four years has been in consequence of the war, and for the benefit of the military and naval service of the country, that the general government ought to relieve the States of their war bts, and that, after adding the aggregate to the national deht. Congress should vote one-third of the whole burden upon the South. That there will be considerable influence brought to bear upon members of Congress in this direction seems probable; but the ability of the general government to bear the extra debt would be no greater than its ability to saddle the restored South with a special burden of one-third of the total indebtedness of the nation. The national debt, already not far from twenty-four hundred millions, will be a heavier weight when the war ends than the people will find easy to carry. It is reasoned that Congress might increase the taxes to meet the interest on the augmented debt; but this would be impracticable unless under a reduction of the interest. There is no telling, however, wha Congress may not enact with regard to our finances in the ture, and the longer the war lasts and the larger the debt the greater the uncertainty.

A statement has just been published, with the permission of the Secretary of the Treasury, which indicates the future loan policy of the government. It will simply be the continuance of the present agency syst in for sale of seven-thirty notes, which has worked so successfully in the hands of Jay Cooke & Co. Up to the end of last week the total subscriptions amounted to nearly a hundred and fifteen millions, leaving about fifty mil-lions unissued under the old act. This loan will mature within two years and a half, when it will be redeemed in legal tender paper, or convertible into five-twenty bonds, having five years to run from August 35, 1867, The six hundred millions authorized by the new act will probably, as far as needed, be raised from sales of seven-thirty notes, divided into three or four separate issues of a hundred or a hundred and fifty millions each, the first series of a bundred and fifty millions maturing one year later than the present issue, and each subsequent series one year later than the preceding one. It is believed that thile some will favor the notes maturing at the earliest date others will, in the hope of a steady appreciation of the carrency, prefer those having longer to run.

The report prepared by the Agricultural Department shows a considerable decline in the crops for 1861 as com-pared with 1862. Corn has increased over the yield of 1863, because of the short crop in that year, and eats, on account of their having been more extensively sown than fore, to meet the wants of the military service; but, with the exception of buckwheat, the other cereals show the effect of the withdrawal of labor from agricultural pursuits to recruit our armies. The contrast between the production of 1862 and 1864 is more marked than that between 1863 and 1864, as the following figures will

The action of the Bank of Virginia and the Farmers' Bank at Richmond, in calling in and paying off their circulating notes at the rate of one dollar in specie to six h paper, shows that the managers of those institutions are sive of the capture of the city and the seizure of Mr gold, and are anxious to discharge their indebted.

ness while rebel money is still a legal tender in that city and the gold is yet within their power. With the rester ation of the fed ral authority there they would have to redeem their outstanding notes in greenbacks, or their equivalent in specie, which would be a much less they are now performing. This has the appearance of one of these shadows which coming events are said to cast before them; and the cry of indignation which the proceeding has evoked from the Richmond press, and the demand they, is every probability that all the gold in the confederacy which the Davis government can lay hands on will be setzed before long. The Richmond Enquirer, in its issue of the 10th inst, said:—"The supplies of the country cannot be secured without gold. The banks have all the
